ABSTRACT

This bibliography focuses upon the programs which have been proposed as a solution to poverty under the so-called war on poverty. The first section of the bibliography suggests some of the materials which could prove useful as theoretical or methodological guides to an analysis of the "powerlessness" of the poor and the operation of the local community action agency. Section two provides a partial listing of works which are relevant to an understanding of political participation at the local level. The third section provides a broad selection of materials dealing with the causes, characteristics, and remedies of poverty. Section four is a selection of academic works and official documents examining various aspects of the war on poverty declared by the Economic Opportunity Acts of 1964 and 1967. And finally, section five suggests some materials which are relevant to a study of the controversial Community Action Program. The bibliography concludes with a selection of relevant newspaper and magazine articles and other popular bibliographies on poverty and the poor. (Author/JM)

INTRODUCTION

As the title suggests this is a bibliography of materials dealing with one of the most widely discussed problems of the contemporary urban environment. What follows is by no means a complete bibliography since such an undertaking would easily fill several volumes. Instead this bibliography focuses upon the programs which have been proposed as a solution to poverty under the so-called war on poverty. In particular it focuses upon the most radical aspect of these programs: The attempt to alleviate poverty by altering the condition of political "powerlessness" which traps the poor and maintains local institutions that are by-and-large unresponsive to the needs and desires of the poor. The most significant expression of this attempt is the Community Action Program.

The first section of the bibliography (pages 3 through 5) suggests some of the materials which could prove useful as theoretical or methodological guides to an analysis of the "powerlessness" of the poor and the operation of the local community action agency. Section two (pages 6 through 13) provides a partial listing of works which are relevant to an understanding of political participation at the local level, particularly as it effects the poor. The third section (pages 14 through 20) provides a broad selection of materials from various disciplines dealing with the causes, characteristics, and remedies of poverty. Section four (pages 21 through 23) is a selection of academic works and official documents examining various aspects of the war on poverty declared by the Economic Opportunity Acts of 1964 and 1967. And finally, section five (pages 24 through 29) suggests some materials which are relevant to a study of the controversial Community Action Program. Case studies of specific community action agencies are emphasized, but public documents and some general works are also included. The bibliography concludes with a selection of relevant newspaper and magazine articles (pages 30 through 32) and other popular bibliographies on poverty and the poor (page 32).
